GM. I'm going to check out for the weekend. I'll leave you with this - the whole @CelsiusNetwork brouhaha started when a video surfaced with complete false accusations. In actuality they saw and analyzed an algorithm and system to save gas and allow our no fee approach.

Our innovation and (unique) "do good" model, was weaponized against us. That part has nothing to do with Alex. That's me and my wonderful engineering team - so I take these accusations personally.

Thankfully the video creator understood his error and took it off.

Alas, when the sewers got flooded the rats came out. The funding spread and created negative pressure on the CEL token price, which brought more funding, etc. A breathtaking flywheel of Twitter scum.

Looking at these folks they all have a position. Steal customers, shell a token, scam, gain followers, personal grudge. Nothing positive or good for crypto or decentralization. No genuine concern or responsibility for their actions spreading false information or bluntly lying.

Sidenote - I don't think pure bitcoin maximalism as a core force in this. The Swan guys, for example, use Prime Trust, a custodian we used to work with as well. So make no mistake Max Keiser, who is an investor in their project, was wearing a business fedora in this ordeal.

The silver lining here is that the Celsius community, company, and staff are strong as always and keep on working. We're all in a bad crypto winter, but we've been here before and came out stronger on the other side.

I want to thank from the bottom of my heart to the hundreds of Celsiusians who reached out on social, email, phone, and in person. Heartwarming and energizing to talk to you guys. You make it all worth it.

Have a wonderful weekend ladies and gentlemen. Think positive.
